Meeting of Democratic Executive Committee.

Pursuant to a call of the Chairman, there was a meeting of the Democratic Executive Committee at the court house at 2:30 p. m., Monday, June 17th.

It was ordered that all candidates coming before the primary election in July be assessed the legal assessment of one dollar each to cover expenses of holding the said election, and the Secretary was instructed to so notify all candidates.

Inasmuch as the law limits the assessment of state and district candidates to one dollar each and there are only four candidates for local offices in one precinct of the county, it was found impracticable to attempt to pay officers for holding the primary election, and the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas, there being no funds to pay officers to hold primaries—Be it resolved: That, the Chairman of each precinct be authorized to make arrangements to hold elections, stationery and tickets necessary for the same only to be furnished each precinct by the Executive Committee."

This means that if a primary election is held in your precinct there must be found men who will give their time voluntarily to hold the election on the 27th of July. Democrats should interest themselves at once and see that men are found to render this patriotic service to the party.

Besides the printing of the ballot in the regular order with the names of the candidates, it was decided to leave a blank for the voters to write in the name of a candidate for County Chairman as provided by law. Also a blank will be left for writing the name of a candidate for precinct chairman for each precinct and enough blanks left for the writing in of the names of as many delegates to the County convention as the precinct may be entitled to in the County Convention. This latter provision does away with the necessity of holding a precinct convention to select such delegates.

In all other matters pertaining to arranging for the primary election, the Chairman, Fletcher Davis, and the Secretary, Elmer de Montel, were given carte blanche.

The committee thereupon adjourned.

Calomel Gives Only Temporary Relief.

So Powerful It Shocks Liver and Leaves It Weaker Than Before. Dodson's Liver-Tone a Perfect Substitute.

Nearly everybody who has ever tried calomel for constipation or a sluggish liver has found that it gives only a temporary relief. For calomel is such a powerful drug that it shocks and weakens the liver and makes it less able afterward to do its duty than in the first place.

This is one of the reasons why W. H. Windrow's drug store would rather sell Dodson's Liver-Tone to you than calomel. We know that Dodson's Liver-Tone is a pure vegetable liver tonic that will cure constipation quickly and gently without any danger of after-effects. We guarantee it to do this with a guarantee that is simple and fair.

If you buy a bottle of Dodson's Liver-Tone for yourself or your children, and do not find that it is a perfect substitute for calomel, then come back to the store and get your money.

If you don't get value for your money out of this tonic, it's your right to expect your money back, and we will gladly give it to you.

Another Daniel, Etc.

Just as we were congratulating ourself upon the thought that there was no occasion to touch editorially this week upon the prohibition issue the following scintillating streak of light shoots itself athwart the murky gloom of prohibition intolerance and spleen:

"Referring to the Uvalde Leader-News and Hondo Anvil-Herald prohibition discussion. If the Anvil Herald is so strong an anti 'Revive-the-rancors-and-the-passions-of-last-summer's-prohibition-fight-that-he-may-camp-follower-like-fatten-on-the-spoils-of-the-political-warfare,' as it would have us believe, why in the sand hill don't it keep its coat on? We do not remember having read the editorial page of the Anvil Herald since last summer without having seen some anti-prohibition dope. For the love of Mike, Davis, be consistent."

The foregoing is from that bright exemplar of consistency, the Bander Enterprise, which [unless our memory is as much at fault as to it as its memory is as to the contents of the Anvil Herald's editorial page], at the beginning of the prohibition campaign of last year, declared positively that it would remain neutral and before the campaign was over was tearing its pajamas for prohibition!

It might be remarked, also, that, if we remember correctly, its county promptly repudiated its preachments by going anti-prohibition!

But be that as it may, the Enterprise shows the consistency in that they make a fight and then marvel at the wickedness of an anti for resisting!

Does not the Enterprise know that before Governor Colquitt had entered upon the discharge of his duties as Governor there was a conference of prohibition leaders to formulate plans for defeating him for a second term? Does it not know that, as a part of that scheme, every impediment possible has been thrown in the way of his successful administration of the affairs of the office? Does it not know that as a part of this scheme Ramsey is now a candidate to defeat him? Does it not know that regardless of how Colquitt behaved since, Ramsey would be a candidate still if for no other purpose than to punish him for his attitude in the prohibition fight?

The Enterprise knows these things if it is capable of knowing anything. Yet it charges Davis, who seeks no office under any condition, with inconsistency for saying:

THE demagogue who would revive the rancors and the passions of last summer's prohibition fight that he may, camp-follower-like, fatten on the spoils of the political warfare is no patriot but is rather a menace to the welfare of the state. He should be buried so deep beneath an avalanche of ballots as to be forever relegated to political oblivion!

Verily, the Enterprise is a bright and shining authority on consistency!

In this connection, and corroborative of our contention as to the attitude of Ramsey, we invite a perusal of the following parallel:

In respect to the matter of State-wide Prohibition I now declare, as I have heretofore declared, that I advocated and voted for prohibition in 1887, and voted for it in the election held last July and would vote for such measure whenever presented. My support of it is as a measure which will decrease intemperance and banish the evils of the saloon. These evils and the domination of our State by the corrupt and corrupting liquor interests, I shall always oppose. I further more believe that in view of the slender majority against such measure at the last election, such election has left the question of constitutional prohibition practically undecided, since it is claimed and believed by thousands of our people that such election was attended by such frauds in respect to the payment of poll taxes and the shameless use of a vast campaign fund and other improper practices which brought about the apparent or real defeat of the amendment, and I, therefore, believe that it will be wise and proper to have the question of State-wide Prohibition again submitted.

—W. F. Ramsey at Gonzales in his opening speech.

It will be seen from that who is seeking to profit by an appeal to prohibition prejudice, and it marks the plain duty of every man who opposes a continuation of the strife, be he pro or anti, to go to the polls July 27th and vote for O. B. Colquitt!

Texas Industries.

Now that good crops are assured, it is time to again think of a cotton oil mill and a compress for Hondo. These are industrial enterprises that Hondo should have and that before our progressive neighbors west of us seize the opportunity. Here is an opportunity for local capital to do a public spirited philanthropy as well as make profit for itself.—Hondo Anvil Herald.

thropy as well as make profit for itself.—Hondo Anvil Herald.

If Texas will begin with the manufactures that are necessarily a part of the Texas situation it will not be long before there will be industries here that might thrive equally elsewhere. The raw material that is produced in Texas ought to be made into the finished product in Texas. That this can be done is shown by the fact that Texas raw material is being shipped far away to be manufactured, and it is then shipped back to the Texas consumer. Texas capital and Texas enterprise will have to engage in this industrial effort if it is to become all that it ought to be. Local capitalists who have gone into industrial enterprises have proven in many parts of the state that it pays them and makes the state more prosperous. Hondo has the right idea and it ought to keep at it until there is fruition of its hopes.—Galveston News.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's catarrh cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O.

TEXAS NEEDS GREAT MEN

XXIX. CONQUEST

POMPEY said that three times he had triumphed and each time for the conquest of a continent; first, Africa, then Europe and next Asia, which completed the conquest of the world. Texas has three continents of industry yet unconquered; first, Agriculture, then Manufacturing, and next Mining, and we await the advent in the life of the State of a powerful man who can take them. Commerce belongs to the country that can conquer it and we need in Texas mental giants who can conquer the mighty forces of nature and wave the flag of Texas over the commerce of land and sea.

POMPEY RETURNING FROM HIS CONQUEST.

Let those who would soar to the altitude of greatness, subdue nature and conquer commerce, wave a wand of genius over our magnificent resources that will widen the industrial horizon of the State; rise out of the feverish throb of modern civilization like a Colossus of medieval times and set up a throne of industry in Texas that will levy tribute on the commerce of the world. Texas Needs Great Men.

COL. JAKE WOLTERS

OPENS CAMPAIGN FOR UNITED STATES SENATE AT TEMPLE.

MAKES FAVORABLE IMPRESSION

Outlines Position on the Tariff, Initiative and Referendum, Anti-Trust Laws, and Needs of Farmers.

"I call to arms that small remnant of loyal Democrats who followed the lion-hearted Richard Coke through files of negro soldiers and State police to plant the flag of an untainted and unstained Democracy upon the ramparts of our government. I call to those multiplied thousands, who, in the passing of a generation, have sustained the faith of the Democratic party against the repeated onslaughts of its foes, to rally once more around the old flag and drive Socialism from within the ranks of Democracy, and preserve the honor and purity of the principles of our party that guarantee to mankind a continuance of a stable government, securing 'Equal rights to all; special privileges to none.'"

Temple, Tex., March 2.—With an able discussion of the rights and needs of the farmer, the initiative and referendum, the tariff and the direct election of senators, the strengthening of our anti-trust laws and the rights of labor and capital, Colonel Jake Wolters, candidate for the United States senate to succeed Senator Joseph W. Bailey, opened his campaign here today before the largest crowd that was ever assembled in Temple or Bell County. The speaker's opening campaign speech was well received and he made a highly favorable impression upon his hearers. On all sides it was agreed that Colonel Wolters is a formidable candidate and can easily hold his own with any man in the State.

The special train bearing the candidate and several hundred of his home friends reached Temple shortly after noon, the speaking beginning at 2:30. Colonel Wolters was introduced by Judge John M. Furman of Belton, a lifelong acquaintance. In introducing the speaker, Judge Furman said that if Colonel Wolters was elected he would be the first native-born Texan to occupy a seat in the United States senate and the first senator from South Texas.

A special train was also run from Waco bearing a large number of Wolters supporters, and low rates were made from Austin and other points along the Katy and Santa Fe.

Colonel Wolters' speech was, in part, as follows:

Ladies and Gentlemen: Imbued with the spirit of the old-time Democracy which actuated the fathers of Texas seventy-six years ago, when they assembled at Old Washington on the Brazos and declared the independence of Texas from Mexico, I come from the ranks of the private citizens to continue the battle for the preservation of those principles in the administration of our public affairs.

I concede to every American the right to think and speak as it pleases him upon any matter of public concern, but I resist that every man shall fight from the ranks and under the flag of the political party whose policies or principles he advocates.

I am a Democrat. I shall contend for the Democratic faith. I am confident that the overwhelming majority of the people of Texas are Democrats. Nor do I doubt that they will rally to the support of the candidate who adheres to the principles of Democracy, to the end that the one of their political faith, not in name alone, but in fact, shall speak and vote their convictions in the senate of the United States. If the people of Texas are no longer Democrats, and do not want one of their faith in the United States senate from Texas—I am not the man to send. I do not understand, nor have I any desire to learn, how to cast a vote contrary to the principles of Democracy.

In submitting my candidacy for the high office to which I aspire, I lay my ambition at the feet of the Democrats of Texas. I shall cheerfully abide by their verdict. Nor do I fear for one moment the action of the members of the legislature, should I become the Democratic nominee for the office of senator. I am sure that every man who aspires to be a member of the next legislature, with the correct conception of the duties of a Democratic representative, will be only too glad to yield his individual preference to that of the Democracy of Texas.

Agreed Issues.

I favor an income tax to be imposed upon the incomes of individuals as well as corporations; the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people; the preservation and strengthening of our Federal anti-trust laws, and opposition to monopolies in trade. An extended discussion of these subjects would not, at this time, be of benefit to the public and would only tend to consume time to the exclusion of other matters which, though no more important, become so only because of differences relating thereto.

Opposes Discrimination in Tariff.

In any extended discussion upon the tariff fragments of an argument are easily misconstrued or distorted. I desire it emphatically understood now and for all time that I am unalterably opposed to protection. I deem it a robbery of the masses to enrich a few. It is a system wholly indefensible either under our constitution or sound business or good morals. There ought to be no difficulty in arriving at the true Democratic position for the reason that we can all agree upon the correct premise upon which we base our arguments and ultimate conclusions. It will not be disputed that the premise is: "The Democratic party stands for a tariff for revenue only. The simple statement of this proposition precludes any possibility of a contention that from a Democratic standpoint, a tariff duty is defensible for any other purpose. Its purpose is not to protect American industries of any kind. We are opposed to protection. But it must not be forgotten that any system of taxation, and especially such an one as the tariff system imposes burdens and incidentally distributes benefits or advantages. Is there a Democrat who will for a moment contend that as a fundamental principle it is not correct that where burdens are to be imposed and benefits distributed by a system of taxation, that they shall be imposed and distributed as equitably as the system will permit, and without discrimination? Justice is the great arch that upholds the Temple of Democracy, and Equality is the keystone that binds together the component essentials of the Arch of Justice. Take from the magnificent Democratic structure the keystone of equality, and it will fall to pieces in an instant. The surest and safest rule to apply in determining whether any proposed governmental policy is in accord with Democratic principles, is to test it by the fundamental rule that in order for it to be Democratic it must confer "equal rights to all; special privileges to none."

The citizenship of our common country may be divided into classes, which pursue agriculture, manufacturing, commerce, mechanical arts, mining and transportation. Intimately connected therewith so as to make it impossible for any of these great pursuits to be successful without the other, are CAPITAL and LABOR. As an essential to these various pursuits, which as a whole constitute the system of our society, we have the great professions with their various collateral branches, and the sciences and arts.

I contend that in devising a system of taxation for the purpose of raising sufficient revenue only to economically administer the affairs of government, the correct Democratic way is to lay the tax so as not to discriminate between any of these classes of our citizenship, nor the sections of our common country. I freely concede that it is probably an Utopian dream, not yet realized by mortal man, to expect that any taxation system, based upon the levying of taxes upon imports, can be made so uniform in its application as not, here and there, to discriminate between classes, but it ought not to be denied that it should be the duty of Democrats to minimize these discriminations whenever and wherever possible, and put them upon as nearly an equitable basis as it is possible to do.

Hence, I contend that in laying the tax upon imports it must be so applied as not to discriminate between the products of the manufacturer and the raw material which the manufacturer requires. So long as the tax is to be laid upon manufactured products of the foreigner, thereby incidentally giving an advantage to the American manufacturer, from whom these American citizens buy, a tax shall be imposed upon the raw material imported by the foreigner, which the American manufacturer buys. Thus we avoid discrimination between all the people of the United States, for our entire citizenship, regardless of their avocation, derive their support and means of livelihood through the industries developed by these two classes—manufacturers, and the producers of raw material. When in any taxation system we discriminate against the producer of the raw material, in favor of the manufacturer, we impose a burden upon all those who are bound together in their means of livelihood with the raw material and it will affect every man within the borders of Texas. When the prosperity of the farmers and stock raisers is adversely affected, the prosperity of labor is at once diminished, the banker feels its effects, the merchant finds trade dull, the transportation companies' business slackens, and the professions find the fees growing fewer and smaller.

If elected, I shall, whenever opportunity is afforded, vote to reduce the tariff to an absolute revenue basis, but I shall also vote so as not to discriminate between the manufacturer and the producer of raw material. We should, of course, lay the highest tax upon luxuries and the lowest upon necessities. By an uniform and universal application of the tax we can make it low upon all articles, and still raise sufficient revenue.

I stand for a tariff for revenue only; not for a protected North and East, and a free trade South and West.

In order that there may be afforded an opportunity to every Democrat in Texas to investigate this subject for himself, I propose to submit, briefly and without copious quotations, the position of the Democratic party upon this question, as well as the position of recognized Democratic leaders.

In 1844 James K. Polk was elected president, and with him a Democratic congress. That congress repealed the tariff act of 1842 and enacted a new law. President Polk in his inaugural address, and in his various messages to that congress, stated the Democratic position to be as I have herein contended that it was and is. Time will forbid my undertaking to quote the many strong statements of President Polk, but I trust that if there is any Democrat in Texas still in doubt as to the Democratic position, he will take the pains to read the messages of President Polk, which may be found in "Messages and Papers of the Presidents," on various pages of Vol. 4. It was while this tariff bill was under consideration that the issue was clearly drawn by the introduction of a resolution by the Whig leader in the senate instructing the committee on finance to place the manufactured products upon the tax list, and leave the raw material upon the free list. We find John C. Calhoun, Lewis Cass and Thomas H. Benton, three of the greatest Democrats the nation produced, standing together against the undemocratic heresy of free raw material. We find General Sam Houston and Thomas J. Rusk, then senators from Texas, on record against that doctrine. We find every Democrat in the senate, except three, opposed to it. It was during that congress that Robert J. Walker, secretary of the treasury, wrote his famous report, in which he presented an argument that for all time destroyed every vestige of the contention that the doctrine of free raw material was in accord with the Democratic theory of the tariff. I understand full well that it is contended that in later years Mr. Walker changed his views upon that question. I do not know what motives induced him to change that position, but I do know that he changed his position upon other public questions. He was a senator from Mississippi—a Southern man, and a Democrat. He went as such into the cabinet of President Polk. When the war between the States came on he cast his fortunes with the North and became one of the bitterest enemies of the South. It was after he did this that he changed his views on taxing raw material and was willing to favor the manufacturers of the North and East by discriminating against the farmers and stock raisers of the South and West. But his argument in opposition to the doctrine of free raw material remains where it has stood for sixty-seven years—unanswered by any man.

In 1896 the national Democratic convention declared:

"We hold that tariff duties should be levied for purposes of revenue, such duties to be adjusted as to operate equally throughout the country, and not discriminate between classes or sections, and this tax should be limited by the needs of the government, honestly and economically administered."

The same year, and prior to the adoption of the national platform, the Democrats of Texas, in a convention held in Austin, declared their opposition to the doctrine of free raw material. That platform was written by none other than the great Democrat who gave to Texas more than fifty years of service, and left a record unblemished and unstained—John H. Reagan.

COLONEL JAKE WOLTERS, Candidate for United States Senate.

In view of the fact that the senator to be elected by you will be associated for the major portion of his term as the colleague of the Hon. Charles A. Culberson, it will not be amiss to here quote his position, in his announcement for the office of senator, on January 1, 1898. He said:

"All Federal taxation, whether in the form of tariff of import or otherwise, should be strictly limited to the necessities of a simple government, economically administered. On the tariff question, I am, in principle a free trader as far as practical, because, among other reasons briefly put, such a policy, in my judgment, would best subserve the interests of the people in that (1) it would tend to enable them to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market of the world; (2) indirect taxation or tariff is a tax on consumption which wholly disregards equality of taxation and government benefits; and (3) direct taxes in lieu of tariff duties by fixing public attention upon expenditures and taxation, would force a marked reduction of expenses and maintain economy. As long, however, as we may be compelled, as under the present constitution, to support the government in large measure by duty on imports, they should be laid for purposes of revenue only, first upon luxuries and last upon necessities of life."

"THUS LIMITED AND APPORTIONED, SUCH DUTIES, IN THE LANGUAGE OF THE NATIONAL PLATFORM OF 1896, SHOULD BE SO ADJUSTED AS TO OPERATE EQUITABLY THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY AND NOT DISCRIMINATE BETWEEN CLASS OR SECTION."

It is needless for me to undertake to cite the position of the junior senator from Texas upon this important question. His position is probably better known and more thoroughly understood than that of any living statesman of either political party. Mr. Bailey has always contended for the application of the Democratic principles of equality in laying taxes upon imports.

In 1904 the Democratic party again declared:

"We denounce protection as a robbery of the many to enrich the few, and we favor a tariff limited to the needs of the government, economically administered and so levied as not to discriminate against any industry, class or section, to the end that the burdens of taxation shall be distributed as equally as possible."

The platform of 1908 demands a revision of the tariff by the reduction of import duties. It provided that articles coming in competition with trust-controlled products be placed on the free list, and that material reductions be made in the tariff on the necessities of life, especially upon articles competing with such American-made goods as are sold abroad more cheaply than at home, and it insists upon a gradual reduction in such other schedules as may be necessary to restore the tariff to a revenue basis. It further demands the repeal of the tariff on wood pulp, print paper, lumber, timber and logs, and that those articles be placed upon the free list. Nowhere in that platform is there a declaration in favor of free raw material. I do not think that it may be contended that the mere declaration in this platform in favor of placing certain articles upon the free list, shows that the doctrine of free raw material is approved.

The latest expression binding upon the Democrats of Texas is that of the last Democratic State convention, which reaffirmed the declarations of the State and National platforms of 1896.

Advocates of free raw material are attempting to fasten a system of taxation upon us, under the terms of which we are to play the old game of "Heads and Tails," so that the manufacturers win when it is "Heads," and we lose when it is "Tails."

I am human, and liable to err, but I assure you now that as your senator, some "Down East Yankee" will never be able to "laugh in his sleeve" and say that I by my vote discriminate against my own people for the benefit of his people.

Upon this question, as all others, I shall yield my individual judgment and views to the judgment of the Democrats of Texas. I have no ambition other than to encompass the happiness and prosperity of the people of Texas. I am part and parcel of them—and my destiny is mingled with theirs. From the sod of Texas I sprang, and with it, in time, I shall mingle my dust. It is my home—my native land—her people are my people; their joys are my joys—their sorrows are my sorrows. Realizing and understanding as I do, that the laying of a tax on imports by this government that will discriminate against the farmers and stock raisers of Texas, in favor of the manufacturers of the North and East, will adversely affect the prosperity of our people, I would not wish to answer to the name of Texas in the United States senate, compelled to cast a vote that would contribute to our injury. If you want a senator to represent the manufacturers of the North and East, rather than the great varied interests of Texas, I respectfully suggest that you elect another, not me. If, on the other hand, you agree with me that it should be our province to have our interests in the senate represented first—then I most cheerfully and gladly and proudly shall contend for your interests with all the energies I possess.

Improvement of Harbors and Waterways.

The comparatively near approach of the time when the Panama canal will be affording an outlet through the ports of Texas for the products of the great Southwest to the markets of the East, emphasizes the importance of the speedy development and improvement of our deep water harbors to the end that not only the people of Texas, but of the entire Southwest, may reap the benefits to which they are entitled by reason of their natural and superior location.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am an economist—not a spendthrift. I would not wish to squander the public funds in undertaking to develop projects that are not practicable of development. To do that would be to indulge in a public graft, which no honest citizen would countenance for a moment; but under the present system, no project is likely to be supported by appropriations from congress until first approved by the engineering department of the government.

Federal Aid for Irrigation.

There are millions of acres of land in Texas as fertile as any on earth, that require the life-giving touch of water. Frequent and long-continued drouths have made agricultural pursuits in those sections of our State precarious undertakings. The time has come when men, representing Texas in the congress of the nation, must, by constructive statesmanship, remedy this trouble. The present reclamation acts authorize the secretary of the interior to construct reservoirs and irrigation systems in States and Territories where the United States owns public lands, and out of the proceeds of the sale thereof. The government owns no public lands in Texas, same being reserved to the State by the annexation treaty entered into upon the admission of Texas into the Union. However, I propose that our representatives and senators devote their talents and energies toward the enactment of a law, whereby a suitable sum shall be appropriated out of the treasury of the United States and placed at the disposal of the secretary of the interior, following in line with the Carey and Newlands acts, to be used in the examination and survey, and for the construction and maintenance of irrigation works for the storage of water for the reclamation of the arid and semi-arid lands in Texas.

I would rather approach the event of my life, beholding the vast areas within the boundaries of Texas, now awaiting cheaper transportation facilities through waterway improvements, afforded them—the lands now drooping beneath the blighting touch of periodical drouths, succored by the embrace of life-giving waters, producing the things that humanity the world over requires for sustenance and protection, dotted with comfortable homes, housing happy and contented men, women and children, conscious that in a period of public service, by my energy and effort, I contributed ever so little to that—than to leave upon the record speeches, though they be utterances in words of gold, framed in silver, which, after all, are only empty words—not deeds.

Local Self-Government.

I adhere to the time-honored principle of local self-government, and the application thereof to the relations existing between the Federal and State government. The autonomy of the State and its right through its courts to adjudicate matters involving the control and regulation of the intra-state business of public service corporations, should be preserved inviolate, as well as all other rights that belong to the State.

Labor.

The right of laborers, skilled and unskilled, to organize for mutual protection is an inherent one. Labor organized or unorganized, is entitled to the benefit of proper legislation, especially applying to their respective crafts. Capital is likewise entitled to the protection of the law safeguarding its investments. In the apparent continuous struggle between capital and labor, each striving for an advantage, we should be just, so that each may not suffer wrong at the hands of the government, and that each may be afforded just and constitutional protection. But ultimately both of these classes of our citizens—the capitalists and the laborers—depend upon the great masses of average citizens that constitute the producing masses of raw material, and the consuming masses of the finished product, for their support, through profits derived directly by the capitalists and indirectly by the laborers through the wages they are enabled to earn from the capitalists because of their dealings with the producers and consumers. In our efforts to define and maintain the rights of capitalists and laborers, we must be guided by wisdom and prudence so that the original producers and the ultimate consumers are not crushed between the upper and nether millstones. I think I may be permitted to say that my life's record should be a sufficient guarantee to the laborers in this State of my friendship for them. I have never played the demagogue. When I thought their demands for remedial legislation were just, I have aided them to the extent of my ability; when I thought these demands were unjust and not for the general public good, I have had the courage to tell them so, adopting as my guide the fundamental principle expressed in the declaration "Equal rights to all; special privileges to none." I am constrained to believe that I possess judgment sufficient to conceive the rights of all concerned and the courage in the performance of the duty of a public servant to apply them in the enactment of proper and suitable legislation upon the subject.

and forty years ago I drew the first breath of life within the confines of the same farm upon which my mother first beheld the light of day. My childhood, my youth, my young manhood and my maturer years have all been spent amongst the people of Austin, Fayette and Harris Counties. I attended the public schools of Fayette County and then Add-Ran Christian University, then located at Thorpe Spring in Hood County. I was admitted to the bar at twenty-one. From that day unto this my life has been spent beneath the bright light of publicity. Thousands of men and women know my every step in life, and know and understand what I have accomplished and what my shortcomings have been, even as neighbors in every community in Texas know the same sort of thing about each other. I mention this as a predicate to make one request. When men go abroad and speak evil of me, before you accept their statements, write to any man or woman in Fayette County, where I spent twenty-five of the forty years of my life, and cheerfully I will acquiesce in anything they may say as to my life. Or, ask the people of Houston, my present home, those who know me. They are the people who ought to know me best, and by their testimony I am willing to be judged. In addition to that there is scarcely a County in this State, where there are not good men who know me personally. I trust that when the scandal monger comes you will deal with me as you would want to be dealt with, under like circumstances.

The Initiative and Referendum—Child of Socialism.

I do not think that it will be wise to apply the initiative and referendum to our National and State governments. The referendum is in use in our State with reference to constitutional amendments. This is as it should be, for the constitution is a compact entered into by and between the individual citizens, under the terms of which the individuals confer certain powers involving frequently the ceding of natural rights, to the legislature. We have also in Texas the initiative and referendum upon matters relating to local and specific questions. We might with safety extend this further to similar subjects, and especially to local matters in the affairs of our municipalities. These exceptions do not involve the abandonment of representative government as it is now proposed shall be done.

The initiative and referendum as a substitute for representative government, found its birth in the ranks of the Socialist party. It is the child of Socialism, and Democracy can not even become its foster parent without violating its fundamental principles. The Democratic party is the exponent of representative government, and not of a system of direct legislation. There is not an advocate of Socialism who will not proudly claim this political heresy as the fundamental principle of the Socialist party.

It will be recalled that the high priests took Jesus before Pilate, who said: "What accusation bring you against this man?" The high priests answered: "If he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him unto thee." Pilate then examined into the matter, after which he said to the Jews: "I find in him no fault at all." He suggested, however, that it being the Passover and the custom upon such occasion to release unto them some man charged with violating the law, that he therefore release unto them "The King of the Jews." This did not please them, and with one voice they cried: "Not this man, but Barrabas." Pilate then scourged Jesus, the soldiers platted a crown of thorns and put it on his head and placed on him a purple robe. Thus attired they led him forth, saying: "Hail, King of the Jews," smiting him with their hands. Pilate said: "Behold, I bring him forth to you that ye may know I find no fault in him." But again rose the cry, "Crucify him, crucify him." To Pilate they said he ought to die, "because he made himself the Son of God." Hearing this Pilate grew a little afraid and proceeded further to investigate this charge. After examining Jesus at some length, Pilate again sought permission to release him. It was then that the high priests, cunning, shrewd politicians that they were, played their master stroke. They understood that Caesar who had appointed Pilate judge could, on the instant, recall Pilate. Then they cried: "If thou let this man go, thou art not Caesar's friend; whomsoever maketh himself king, speaketh against Caesar." Hearing this Pilate returned to the judgment seat. He hoped yet to be able to appease the Jews, and once more said: "Jews, behold your king." But again came that terrible cry—"Away with him; away with him; crucify him." Once more and for the last time Pilate turned to them, pleading: "Shall I crucify your king?" Hark to the insinuating reply, the reply that struck terror to the heart of the poor, weak Pilate: "We have no king but Caesar." Then there arose before Pilate, the judge, the appointee of Caesar, the vision of Caesar's wrath when these politicians among the Jews should lay their complaint before mighty Caesar—that a judge appointed by him refused to crucify one who had dared to set himself up as a king of the Jews. The charge that Jesus had violated God's law did not affect Pilate, but when it was made to appear that Jesus had offended against Caesar, who had the power to recall Pilate, the judge, he delivered Jesus unto the Jews to be crucified and they led him away and he was crucified.

Never by my vote shall I aid in the inauguration of a system of government that will make the judge on the bench cringe and bow to the cry: "Crucify him, crucify him, crucify him!"

Ask the People Who Know Me.

My father and mother were born beneath the blue skies of South Texas,

I am an optimist—not a pessimist. I would rather live in the golden sunshine of a glorious heart expanding optimism for one single moment of time, than to grovel in the misty, pessimistic shadows of pessimism throughout the eternal years. The men of our State and nation are not bad—they are good, strong and honest. The danger to the stability of our government, our prosperity and continued happiness is not corruption, in high places or low, it is moral cowardice in dealing with questions of public import. Men in public office who are willing to subvert principles of government in order to catch the political support of this or that element are not to be entrusted as public station. The Democrat who will today forsake the teachings of his party to gain the favor of Socialists will, on the morrow, if he deem it a political advantage, kiss the foot of a despot's monopoly. I have no hope that the conscience of those who, by their zealous greed for money, forget their fellowmen and their country, shall be aroused to the dangers that confront us, nor yet have I hope that those who, by reason of unavoidable circumstances of misfortune, or through shifty habits, have fallen upon hard times, and vainly seek for better things in theories, that, if put into practice, will destroy free, stable government among men, shall be halted in their mad, onward rush.

I do not hope to reach the heart of Dives, nor the ear of Lazarus. I do not hope to stay the ruthless hand of the politician, who, wrapped in the ambitions of self, is blind to his country's weal or woe. For such there are only today, when opportunity must be clasped in endearing embrace—no tomorrow, when principles violated and outraged, confront us with the fallacies of today. There is a class to whom I do appeal, confident that I shall not speak in vain. With centralization threatening on one hand, and Socialism on the other, I turn with reassured confidence to that class of our citizenship, which, not very rich, is yet not very poor—the class that toils in the fields, on the ranches, in the factories, shops, the tracks and trains of our great transportation companies, the stores, the offices, the forests, the mills, the mines and whosoever strong-hearted and clear-minded men and women engage in legitimate endeavor to sustain life and lay away a little for a rainy day. The dauntless courage of the men of that class fought the battles of the Republic at the front, while its women managed the home. Their good, common sense has maintained this government in every great crisis. It is this great middle class I would fain call once more to the defense of correct Democratic principles. It is only by the continued application of these principles that a sound and stable government may be maintained, and the prosperity and development of our commonwealth furthered. It is you who must end this ceaseless strife and agitation that disturbs the orderly proceedings of our affairs. Thus I come from the private walks of life, not from high public station, ambitious to serve Texas as a senator as is true, yet not more ambitious for political preferment, than animated by a sincere desire to see the Democracy of this State remain untainted from the withering touch of Socialism and held to the proud prestige which only purity of principles can secure and maintain for it.

I call to arms that small remnant of loyal Democrats who followed the lion-hearted Richard Coke through files of negro soldiers and State police to plant the flag of an untainted and unstained Democracy upon the ramparts of our government. I call to those multiplied thousands, who in the passing of a generation have sustained the faith of the Democratic party against the repeated onslaughts of its foes, to rally once more around the old flag and drive Socialism from within the ranks of Democracy, and preserve the honor and purity of the principles of our party that guarantee to mankind a continuance of a stable government, securing "Equal rights to all; special privileges to none."

"When men go abroad and speak evil of me, before you accept these statements, write to any man or woman in Fayette County, where I spent twenty-five of the forty years of my life, and cheerfully I will acquiesce in anything they may say as to my life. Or, ask the people of Houston, my present home—those who know me. They are the people who ought to know me best, and by their testimony I am willing to be judged."

I trust that when the scandal monger comes you will deal with me as you would want to be dealt with under like circumstances.

CHAMP CLARK PROGRESSIVE

Asserts His Prior Claim to This Now Popular Title.

EARLY IN ANTI-TRUST FIGHT.

He Secured the Passage of One of the First Trust Curbing Laws Ever Enacted by Any State Legislature—Introduced Australian Ballot Bill—Led the Tariff Attack.

Washington, D. C.—[Spl.]—It became known today that Speaker Clark has written the following vigorous letter.
Its meaning cannot be misunderstood:

Washington, March 7, 1912.

Dear Mr. Tavenner—In reply to your letter
I will say:
I voted for the initiative and referendum in Missouri when the constitutional amendment was submitted. That ought to be proof enough on the subject. If you will examine into my record in the legislature and in congress you will find that Copyright by Edmonston.

SPEAKER CHAMP CLARK.

I was getting progressive legislation passed before some of those progressives were heard from.

I have always favored electing senators by direct vote of the people. Beginning with 1894, I have been nominated for congress by primary every two years, and I had the primary called myself.

I introduced, reported and secured the passage in the legislature of Missouri of one of the first anti-trust laws ever passed by any state legislature in America.
That law has been tested in all the courts, and nobody has ever been able to pick a flaw in it. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been collected in fines under it, and three or four big trusts have been driven out of Missouri.

I introduced and secured the passage of the Australian ballot law. I voted for the corrupt practice act while I was in the legislature. I had one of my friends introduce the parole bill. My activity in having the primary introduced in my district and constantly agitating the subject at last secured a general primary law in Missouri.

As minority leader I led the fight to overthrow the house machine and liberal-ize the rules. I also led the fight against the Payne tariff bill, which attracted the attention of the whole country and gave us the house in 1910.

I have advocated and voted for every progressive measure introduced into the house in the last nineteen years. All these things are matters of record. There is nothing in my career that I have to explain away or apologize for. Truly your friend,

CHAMP CLARK.

CLARK LEADS IN IOWA.

The Big Speaker Gets Nearly All Delegates Elected to the State Convention Up to This Time.

Des Moines, Ia., April 12.—Up to this time 602 delegates have been elected to the Democratic state convention of Iowa. Of this number Clark has 454 and Professor Wilson 148. This proportion will probably keep up. It is the general opinion in Des Moines that Clark will carry this state easily.

Clark's Accomplishments Extended.

At the New York state Democratic convention Representative John J.
Fitzgerald in his address as permanent chairman declared that under the wise leadership of Speaker Clark the Democratic house has made a record unrivaled in political history.

GENERAL WEAVER'S DYING MESSAGE.

This letter is the last one ever written by this grand old Democratic leader, General James B.
Weaver of Iowa. He died just a few days after this was written:
Hon. W. D. Jamieson, Des Moines, Ia.

My Dear Sir—I have taken the time to think over the political situation in Iowa and have reached the definite conclusion that this state should support the Hon.
Champ Clark for president. Our delegation to the Baltimore convention should, every one of them, aggressively support his candidacy.
This is emphatically Clark territory. His versatility and wide experience as a legislator, his long acquaintance with the public men of the country and his thorough understanding of the motives of those who represent the almost omnipotent "interests"—motives which are never willingly disclosed or admitted—pre-eminently qualify him for the high position. I say this not with any resentment toward other candidates. They are all eminent men and small things should not be introduced or considered.
The path of duty is plain. Let us follow it with charity for all. I am resolutely and unalterably for Mr.
Clark and trust sincerely that Iowa will so align herself at Baltimore.
With high regard, I am, very truly yours,
J. B. WEAVER.
Colfax, Ia., Jan. 26, 1912.

Rebellion

Billy sat on the extreme edge of the last stone forming the low wall bordering the grounds about his home.
There was a lowering expression upon his face. Now and then he bent his heels viciously against the stones of the wall.

Around the corner swung Mrs. Donnell. Billy and Mrs. Donnell were chums, so she beamed and called "Hello!" as a chum should. Billy looked up from under his frowning brows and made no answer.

"My goodness!" exclaimed Mrs.
Donnell, pausing in surprise. "What's the matter with you this morning?
Where's your laugh? And your dimple?"

Billy growled something and shifted around. Then he spoke with a great effort. "They've got—" He actually choked over the word. "They've gone and got a— a baby at our house!" He jerked his head toward what had been home to him. The expression of his face signified that his connection with the place was now completely severed.

"O—oh! I see," said Mrs. Donnell. She flicked the top of the wall with an absurd handkerchief and then sat down beside Billy. Her seriousness was very comforting. "No wonder you are excited."

"I'm not excited," contradicted Billy, flatly. "I'm mad. I don't want it.
What good is a baby? Nobody buttoned my shoes for this morning!"

"Horrible!" sympathized Mrs. Donnell. She pulled one fat leg up on her lap and proceeded to remedy the defect in Billy's toilet. "Well, you see, the baby's new, and you must expect them to be dreadfully interested in it.
People are that way. You've no idea how foolish they can be over a red, homely little new baby, Billy."

"Theirs is awful red," Billy declared scornfully. "And it yells. That isn't the worst, though—it's a girl!"
He shot out the words in explosive contempt. "What good's a girl?"

"They certainly have piled it up on you, haven't they?" cried Mrs. Donnell. "Whatever are you going to do?"

"I'm thinking," announced Billy.
"First I thought I'd run away. It ain't going to be any fun at home any more.
All they do is look at the baby and act silly over it. I can wait 'n' wait for somebody to pour the cream on my peaches, an' there's nobody to do it. Mother she stays right with that baby and father he stays with it, and Mary she just runs around from the kitchen to upstairs and back again and says 'The darlin'! Ain't it sww-w-eet!'"

"Well, isn't it?" queried Mrs. Donnell in suspiciously shaky tones.

Billy glared at her in reproach.
"Sweet!" he almost yelled. "It's just ugly and red, and I hate it!"

"Billy!"

"I do!" repeated Billy. "It can't do a thing! It doesn't know anything!"
When father took me in to see it this morning I showed it my new knife and it wouldn't even look at it! It would if it had been a boy! Boys have some sense! Father just laughed.
And anyhow I didn't have any use for a baby."

"I know," said Mrs. Donnell. "I'll go and buy the baby and take it away and that will rid you of it."

Wild hope sprang into Billy's eyes.
Then it died out. "You don't want it," he said, disgustedly. "After you take a good look at it you wouldn't even let 'em give it to you!"

"Mercy!" said Mrs. Donnell. "Is it as bad as that? Well, I might take it anyway just to oblige an old friend like you. Here comes your father—I'll see about it now!"

"Good morning, Mr. Baxter! I was just talking business with your son.
He says there is a superfluous baby up at the house that is in his way, and he'd like to dispose of it. If you'll sell it I'll take it off your hands.
What price do you ask?"

"Um-m!" said Billy's father, frowning thoughtfully. "Now, that's kind of you. What shall we sell it for,
Billy?"

"A quarter," Billy suggested tentatively.

"Oh, I think we ought to ask at least 30 cents," said his father. "But wouldn't your mother object? I think she'd feel sorry if we sold it!"

"Would she?" asked Billy in surprise.

"Yes," said his father. "It's queer but she's just crazy about it. You and I have got to stand together and beat it! We don't want to hurt mother's feelings, do we?"

"No-o!" admitted Billy, irresolutely.
"Have you seen what funny figures it has? They curl around one of yours, tight!"

"Do they?" asked Billy, interestedly.
"That's what they do," said his father. "Come with me and I'll show you. You can have lots of fun with it, Billy. Come on!"

"All right," said Billy, sliding down from the wall and joining his father.
"I guess we won't sell it," he called back to Mrs. Donnell. "But thank you just the same!"

A Manager.

"Why do you insist on carrying that umbrella?" asked the bridegroom.
"For purposes of domestic economy," replied the bride. "I'm going to turn it upside down and catch enough rice to do the family for several weeks."

Died.

Fritz J. Leinweber, aged 47 years, died at 12:20 o'clock Monday morning, June 17, 1912, at a sanitarium in San Antonio after an illness of about three weeks duration. The remains were embalmed and brought to Hondo Monday and buried in the new cemetery at three o'clock Wednesday afternoon under the auspices of the Sons of Herman Lodge. Rev. M. L. Darby conducted a brief funeral service both at the home and at the grave.

The deceased was born and raised in Medina County and was for a number of years engaged in business in Hondo.
Recently, however, he has devoted his entire time to his extensive farming interests here. He is survived by his wife and four small children. He is also survived by three sisters, Mesdames George H. Bendele, F. L. Graff and Armin Bendele, and three brothers, C. B., George and E. R. Lein-weber, all of this county.

Mr. Leinweber leaves his family well provided for, besides being successful in business he was insured in the Knights of Honor, the Sons of Herman and the Medina County Aid Society.

His untimely death is peculiarly sad and the bereaved companion and fatherless little ones who are left to mourn a loving and indulgent husband and father have the heartfelt sympathy of all who know them.

Despite the rain of two days duration and the fact that the roads were almost impassable, a large concourse of mourning relatives and friends paid their last respects to the departed by following his remains to their last resting place.

ED. ANVIL HERALD:

After an absence of some time, I feel obliged to again contribute to the columns of your worthy paper.

The farmers are jubilant over a much needed rain that has been falling here since Monday night, which assures a bumper corn and cane crop. A much heavier rain must have fallen up on the Hondo for that creek came down on a boom Tuesday.

While walking in his sleep at the home of Mrs. Anne Saathoff, where he was staying over night, Oscar Mangold walked out of and fell to the ground from a window on the second floor and broke his leg. He was taken to Hondo at once where a surgeon set the broken limb, since, which he has been doing as well as could be expected and was permitted to return to his home at Tarpley.

A big crowd and a good time is the ton, are here from San Antonio on a week's visit to Mrs. Schneider's parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Saathoff.

A MAGNIFICENT RECORD AS AN OFFICIAL IS HARMON'S BIG ASSET

Columbus, O. — (Special) — The News, Port Huron, Mich., in declaring for Governor Harmon of Ohio for president, points to a long list of what it says are practical reforms the Buckeye executive has instituted and then issues a challenge to others to produce another Democrat of presidential timber who has as good a list to his credit.

The following reforms were enumerated by The News as showing "where Harmon stands on political issues."

First—He stands for the criminal prosecution of guilty trust magnates under the criminal provision of the Sherman anti-trust law.

He is the only official who dared to start proceedings to jail the officials of an offending corporation. He was stopped by President Roosevelt.

Second—Personally conducted and won the first government anti-trust case. The law had slept for six years. Harmon, as attorney general, prosecuted the Addyson pipe case and the Trans-Missouri Traffic association case; secured a sweeping decision in the United States supreme court.

Third—Harmon stands for the direct election of United States senators by the people.

Fourth—Harmon stands for the income tax amendment to the federal constitution. Ohio passed his resolution to that effect.

Fifth—Harmon stands for equal taxation. His tax commission added $487,000,000 to the assessed valuation of the Ohio railroads, and one billion dollars to the assessed valuation of all public utilities in Ohio. This conservative governor has increased railroad and corporation values nearly a billion dollars, an increase of 255 per cent, and has reduced the taxes of farmers and home owners more than $7,000,000 a year, and he prevented trouble by treating all interests justly.

Sixth—Harmon stands for economy in governmental expenditures, and he has lopped off nearly $3,000,000 of the annual tax burden of the people.

Seventh—Harmon has urged and secured the enactment of the following laws:

(a) A law providing for the non-partisan election of the judiciary in Ohio.

(b) The non-partisan election of delegates to the constitutional convention.

(c) A public utilities commission with authority to regulate issues of stocks and bonds, rates and services.

(d) A workingman's compensation act to be paid out of a fund, of which the employer provides 90 per cent and the employee 10 per cent.

(e) A law for central board of control of all state institutions. This law was advocated by Governor Osborn of Michigan, but failed of passage.

(f) A law providing civil service for employees of state institutions.

(g) A law granting initiative and referendum to municipalities.

(h) A "corrupt practices" act modeled on English statutes and fixing

GOVERNOR HARMON, Who Carried Ohio by 101,000 Votes.

the maximum amount of money to be spent by a candidate.

(i) A law providing a nine-hour day for employed women.

(j) A reform of Ohio election laws to prevent corruption and fraud.

(k) Governor Harmon advocated but failed to have enacted:

(a) Direct primary for every office in the state, county and city.

(b) The removal of party emblems in municipal elections.

The above record is one that Governor Harmon need not be ashamed of, nor afraid to go before the people upon. He is a man that is progressively conservative and a safe man to be in charge of the people's interests.

law which sought to compel them to pay office operating expenses from fees they earn and collect, but they were extravagant in clerk hire and drew upon county treasuries for deficits. To stop this a bill was enacted limiting clerk hire to a certain per cent of receipts and the annual saving was $50,000.

A law was passed providing for annual appraisal of all state property by three men, who were to receive aggregate salaries of $18 per diem. They would have been busy the year round, but Governor Harmon vetoed this and saved the people annually $6,000; the 1911 partial appropriation bill enacted by the general assembly showed a reduction in the salaries of state employees of $26,698. Many Democratic state officers followed the example of their chief and saved money. State inspector of Engineers Haswell, a Democrat, lowered the annual operating expenses of his department in 1910 $16,062.34; State Oil Inspector Finley, a Democrat, although his expenses during the last half of 1910 were $766.82 less than those of his predecessor, a Republican, collected and paid into the state treasury fees during that period that exceeded those of his predecessor $5,527.98.

State Printer Crawford, a Democrat, reduced the 1910 operating expenses in his department $2,738.60; by paring down requisitions of members during a five months' session in 1911, there was a saving by the stationery clerks of the Ohio house of representatives of $1,022.09; State Labor Commissioner Wirmel increased the efficiency of his department in 1910 and paid into the state treasury an amount that exceeded that of his predecessor $4,370.48; Senate Clerk Goshorn and House Clerk Kemmer, Democrats, disregarded a precedent under which their predecessors were paid $5 per day for Sunday work, although they never performed any services on those days, and the annual saving was $300.

HUMANITY VS. RED TAPE.

Those who know Judson Harmon best, know him as a man whose heart is full of sympathy for the man who toils, and an incident during Mr. Harmon's receivership of the Pere Marquette railroad proves that. In 1907 an excursion train carrying employees of the Pere Marquette and their families on an outing was wrecked. A lumber were killed. Receiver Harmon did not permit red tape to hinder him from doing an humane act. He ordered that no attempt be made to take advantage of the fact that injured persons were injured while on account of their relationship with fellow servants of the employees who were to blame for the collision or any other grounds, but that settlements should be made.

CHAMP CLARK IS SIXTY-TWO

Ten Thousand Washingtonians Help Him Celebrate.

VICTOR OF THE WAR OF 1910

Congressman Lafe Pence's Happy Reference to His Personal Triumph in the Congressional Elections — "He Has Already Carried the Country." Record of His Leadership.

Washington, D. C. — [Spl.] — Speaker Clark's birthday celebration was one of the most remarkable meetings in the history of the capital of the nation. Ten thousand persons thronged Convention hall and paid tribute to the man who had lived and worked among them for eighteen years.

Probably the most remarkable speech of the evening was that made by ex-Congressman Lafe Pence of Colorado, who went into congress with Mr. Clark in 1892. It is particularly interesting to the Democrat who is trying to make a decision as to the best candidate for the party to choose at this time.

Lafe Pence's Speech.

"It is not strange that Speaker Clark is very generally regarded as the strongest candidate the Democracy could nominate. Compared with all commanders and leaders, he is naturally now as strong relatively as was Grant in 1864 when compared with other federal officers. He has fought the long fight. He has already won not only battles, but a war—the war of 1910. He was the issue in 1910, not in his home district, not in Missouri, but in every congressional district in the republic. He has already carried the country. Only one other Democrat since the civil war has done that. His strength has been demonstrated in exactly the states that are necessary to make up the majority in the electoral college. He is not weaker now than in 1910. He is stronger, much stronger, in the estimate of all thoughtful people. This is no guess. Each special session since 1910 has demonstrated it. Under his leadership the Democratic party is again recognized and known as the constructive party, the party that builds and makes and does. When minority leader in the Sixty-first congress he led his party into the open and pledged its sacred word to the sovereign people that if trusted with power it would accomplish, so far as it could, certain changes and reforms. The people believed him. They elected him and his majority in the house, and within sixty days after the special session began every promise had been redeemed. His party leadership is a most interesting study.

"After the campaign of 1904 we had left but one Democratic governor north of Mason and Dixon's line, Johnson of Minnesota. We did not have the control of a single branch of a single state legislature north of Mason and Dixon's line. We had out a petty dozen or two of congressmen from districts north of Mason and Dixon's line. By 1908 the conditions were somewhat improved. We had a few more congressmen. We had better strength in some northern state legislatures and had increased the number of Democratic governors, notably in Governor Burke of North Dakota, Shafroth of Colorado, Marshall of Indiana and Harmon in Ohio.

"That year, 1908, was elected the Sixty-first congress, and Clark became our minority leader there. He was different from any leader we have had. He had a more humble origin in life. His boyhood and young manhood tasks had been harder and more like those of the average struggling man. He had read as much as any of them and forgot nothing. His mind was as well stored, and maybe his heart was a little warmer. Be that as it may, he gave thought to those states where wages and payrolls and smokestacks are of first consideration and impressed his ideas upon his followers, and, lo and behold, we had a new leadership! He could not equal Mr. Bailey in discussing a constitutional question, but no body on earth can do that. He could not discuss a finely drawn parliamentary question with the unexampled mastery of Mr. Richardson, nor could he wield the rapier of keen personal controversy in debate as could Mr. Williams, but he could do what none of these leaders could do. He could wield the battleaxe of hard, strenuous, persistent, consistent debate, thoughtful of the north country as well as the south country, and he did wield it until he chopped his way through the solid ranks of the enemy to daylight and made his party respectable and him self great.

"The people have not forgotten his magnificent cross examination of the witnesses before the ways and means committee when Mr. Payne was getting his tariff bill ready, nor his exposure of that testimony in debate upon the floor of the house, nor his call to his following to stand as one man and their obedience, nor his challenge to Payne and Cannon that at last the people would vote with their eyes open to all the facts and a Democratic house would succeed. His word gave to the Democracy of the country a thrill and an inspiration that they had not felt since the days of Tilden and Hendricks. The Democracy despondent became the Democracy militant and in November 1910, the Democracy triumphant, for everywhere it buckled on the armor which he had selected. It was not long from 1904 to 1910—only six years—but behold the list of Democratic governors! Clark speeches were circulated by the million. His clear warning to Cannon and Payne that the high cost of living under their tariff bill would be the inevitable issue was recognized and accepted and acted upon everywhere. Of course in every state there were some local issues, some of which helped us and some of which hurt us, but everywhere the issue made by the Democratic minority in the Sixty-first congress was our real battlecry. Everywhere Clark's words were quoted, and in every district in the republic every voter knew when he voted for a congressman that he voted either for Cannon of Illinois or for Clark of Missouri as the majority leader, and so I say again Clark has already demonstrated his ability to carry the country for himself, and not only that, but to carry thousands of other Democrats into honorable public position. Upon his issues, urged persistently, we elected governors everywhere. It was true in Maine with Governor Plaisted, in Massachusetts with Governor Foss, in Connecticut with Governor Baldwin, in New York with Governor Wilson and everywhere else.

"And so it is no exaggeration to say that the name Champ Clark has guaranteed and underwritten the high commissions of all the splendid columns of new Democratic governors and new Democratic congressmen, and his guarantee is good. The people have taken the opportunity to so certify since 1910, because where, by death, vacancies have occurred in the new membership of the Sixty-second congress special elections have been held, and Mr. Clark has been made the issue. He has personally campaigned the districts, and we have continued to win and win. The splendid confidence of 1910 is demonstrated on every occasion that has been presented.

"So day by day, month by month and year by year we have the proof of his strength and the earnest confidence of the American people in his promises and his leadership. There is not a single voter in America who voted for him for speaker by voting for the Democratic candidate for congress who is not proud of his vote and who would not be proud to vote for him for president. Those votes are enough. They are located in just exactly the right states. They voted on conviction. They accepted a pledge. They have seen the pledge redeemed. They have a personal interest in this great man. They hope to see him president of the United States, and they are only waiting until November to help make him president of the United States.

"It is not necessary to make comparisons or distinctions between Mr. Clark and the other great Democrats who bear honorable commissions. It is no serious reflection upon them that none of them has been able to demonstrate a similar strength before the people, because none of them has had the chance. Each of them might have been able after years of trial such as has fallen to him to demonstrate a like strength and capacity of leadership and a like ability to command and secure the warm and earnest confidence of the people. It so happens that he alone has made the record full, round and complete that exactly fits and fills the issues upon which the party must and will go to the country next fall. The time is too short between June and November to educate the people and make them feel sure of either the capacity or the convictions of any man new and untried in national political life. We haven't the time, and we haven't the money or the means or the facilities, and we don't need to undertake such a hopeless task, because the voters already know the man who fits the issues and are already educated on the issue—which fit the man.

"With Clark We Can't Lose."

"He is a great party leader who when commissioned to high office so bears himself as to command the harmonious and united action of those who have raised him to high place and who in unison with his party followers make it easier and surer each following election for his party to win. How very fortunate and very happy indeed we would be if we had seen this quality, which so emphatically marks the disposition and career of Mr. Clark, exemplified in all of our party leaders, so that everywhere it might have been demonstrated in 1911 that we were stronger than in 1910.

"Clark will be nominated because, while in speaking of any other candidate we all say with a fairly firm confidence, 'WE THINK WE CAN WIN,' all Democrats everywhere with one voice say, 'WITH CLARK NOMINATED WE CAN'T LOSE!'

"By their fruits shall ye know them. That is true of fig trees, grapevines, apple trees, sinners, saints and candidates. Not by their leaves nor by their blossoms, but by their fruits—their real ripened fruits. Their leaves are green and tender and soon wither. Their blossoms are mere promises and altogether too numerous and easily frostbitten. A very wise man and a very great man, a real leader, upset three hours of words and theories at the famous Jackson day dinner in this city on the 8th of January last in one sentence when he uttered those famous words, 'An ounce of performance is worth a ton of promises.'

"We have been trying a long while to satisfy the necessary number of Republican voters in the necessary vital and pivotal states that the Democratic party is entitled to their confidence. They have doubted us. They have been weary enough and tired and thirsty and hungry enough in their destitution and wanderings with the Republican party. They have wanted to believe the story we have told them of the benefits to them and their children of entering into the 'Democratic promised land.' BUT OUR SCOUTS HAVE FRIGHTENED THEM. Now the situation is changed. Now they have seen the fruits of a Democratic victory made possible by their votes in 1910. Now they understand that the promises of 1910 were seriously made by a serious man, who would not lie to them if he could and could not lie to them if he could. He comes back to them bearing the proofs of his own good faith and the good faith of the party whose representatives in congress followed him.

Ended One Man Rule.

"He does not come empty handed. He said to the people when he was leader of the minority and was attacking the followers of Cannonism that he was advocating a principle for which he would stand when he spoke for a majority; that the 'one man rule' must end in the house of representatives; that the people's congress must be controlled by the people's representatives, each man equally, each district the equal of every other district. Did he mean it? Let us see. When, early in 1911, the Sixty-second congress, with its great Democratic majority in the house, was called in special session the Democratic majority in caucus paid to him the high honor of a unanimous nomination as speaker. No other speaker at his first election had ever been so honored. The usual resolution was offered in caucus, placing in the speaker's power the old time authorities and prerogatives, and he himself arose in caucus and reminded the body that the pledge had been given to the people that that system must end and, however tempting the offer might be personally to him, it was his wish that the resolution should be withdrawn and a policy pursued exactly in accord with the promise made to the voters, AND IT WAS DONE. The promise was kept.

And then he reminded his fellow Democrats in that caucus of a series of specific promises that had been made and asked them to join with him in seeing to it that every one of those promises should be redeemed, and every one was redeemed. And then from every latitude and longitude came the praises of the people for the Democratic house of representatives and the recognition THAT AT LAST WE WERE DEPENDABLE. And as the weeks have proceeded and month followed month the record of the Democratic house has grown stronger and better. Is there any voter now left who looks upon the 'Republican minority' led by Cannon and Daize and Payne, as worthy of more confidence and respect than the Democratic majority?

"So Mr. Clark comes to the vast army of necessary Republican voters, whose support we had in 1910 and must have again if we will win, bearing proofs, not in the leaf, not in the blossom, but laden, hands full, back full, arms full with fruits of promises KEPT, pledges REDEEMED, things DONE, benefits CONFERRED, HOPE REVIVED. He comes like Joshua of old. You will remember that when the people of Israel were hesitating about entering the promised land a dozen scouts were sent into its borders to exploit it and report. A dozen princes of Israel. Ten of them came back and alarmed and frightened the people by saying: 'There are giants over there. Stay away. The country is not good. Not so with Joshua. He came back bearing figs, pomegranates and grapes, the fruits of the promised land, the actual, substantial, edible, tasteful, wholesome fruits, and said to the people, 'There is more over there, plenty, plenty, and the land is good, and the sun is bright, and the water is pure, and God is there, and the people believed him and followed him and went with him into the promised land and possessed it.'

"It is not because these suggestions are new, but because they are not new, that makes them worth while. It is because they are familiar already to the people whose votes must elect. We are not introducing Mr. Clark to the public. For twenty years his life has been an open book before them all.

The People's Champion.

"The people whose suffrages will elect their president need no titillation from his votes, his record or his words to be reminded that he has throughout his entire public career been their champion. They will review his record, his votes, his words, when he has become our nominee—as a laborer of love and sweet reminder of the good deeds of their good friend who has been at all times thoughtful of them and their welfare—and they will vote for him and will elect him in the abiding faith, belief and knowledge that when inaugurated he will continue to say as president, just as he has said as congressman, to the despottish and oppressors of the toilers of this land, in kind, homely, unmistakable Ozark language, but speaking by the authority of the highest office in the world, officially, finally and irrevocably, 'You've gotta quit kickin' my people aroun'.'

"Mr. Chairman, we have had strong men in the White House, none, however, with bigger or warmer heart, none with riper experience or mind better stored, than this great Missourian, this splendid American, the man who said, 'No man is fit to be the lawgiver for a mighty people who fields to the demands and solicitations of the few who have access to his ear and is forgetful of the vast multitude who may never hear his voice or look into his face.'

INJURIOUS FLAVORS IN MILK

One Kind Due to Feed Eaten by and Second Largely Caused by Contamination.

(By B. F. KAUPP, Pathologist, Ohio Agricultural College.)

The abnormal or injurious flavors in milk are of two kinds; first, those due to feed eaten by the cow; second, those due to contamination. The first kind is scientifically known as feed flavors and is due to cow eating large quantities of turnips, caulage, beets, ragweed, etc. This ill flavor is due to volatile feeds. Such flavors leave the milk through the different secretions of the body.

When feeding is done immediately after milking, these feed flavors largely pass off through other channels, or secretions, than the milk, and are not noticeable. It is also maintained that if some rough forage fed along with such feeds that produce ill tastes in milk, it assists in obviating such flavors.

It is within the power of the dairyman to obviate the second, flavor contamination. This class of ill flavor is largely due to contaminating bacteria. Of these there are many, each giving its peculiar flavor. Another contaminating flavor is due to the sorption of certain strong odors.

The cause of the contamination milk is largely due to lack of perfect cleanliness with the milking utensils, surroundings, methods of delivery and personal cleanliness.

The udder and adjacent parts should be washed with clean water and wiped dry with a clean, dry towel. The hands and the clothing of the milkman should be clean. Bottles, buckets, etc., should be sterilized with live steam and turned upside down so as to prevent the collection of dust, which always contains germ and mold spores. Small top milk should be compulsory by law.

SILO HAS MANY ADVANTAGES. Ensilage is Nearest and Most Economical Substitute for Pasture Grass, Ideal of Rations.

An Ohio farmer, who has used ensilage for a number of years, sums up the advantages which he gains as follows:

"I would say that every stock farmer should have a silo for the following reasons:

"First—Because corn ensilage is the nearest and most economical substitute for pasture grass, which is the most ideal of all our rations.

"Second—That an acre of corn ensilage yields from 600 to 2,000 pounds more nutrients per acre than any other of the farm crops.

"Fourth—That its use makes it more pleasant to feed stock and also saves a great deal of time and labor.

"Fifth—Because with its use in the winter ration, larger gains and milk flow are the result.

"Sixth—With its use, practically the entire food value of the corn crop is saved.

"Seventh—That the silo enables the farmer to keep double the number of head of stock on the same farm.

"Eighth—That our fields are cleared and ready for fall wheat or rye, as all our corn stalks are safely stored in our silo instead of going to waste in the field.

"Ninth—And lastly and probably the most convincing of all, is the fact that practically every farmer now using the silo would not do without it. When we can grow and store away for winter use a food that takes the place of our pasture and that food can be raised on our farms at a less cost than any of our present feeds, the equipment for the storing of such feed should be installed on every stock and dairy farm."

Women's Secrets

There is one man in the United States who has perhaps heard more women's secrets than any other man or woman in the country. These secrets are not secrets of guilt or shame, but the secrets of suffering, and they have been confided to Dr. R. V. Pierce in the hope and expectation of advice and help. That few of these women have been disappointed in their expectations is proved by the fact that ninety-eight per cent. of all women treated by Dr. Pierce have been absolutely and altogether cured. Such a record would be remarkable if the cases treated were numbered by hundreds only. But when that record applies to the treatment of more than half-a-million women, in a practice of over 40 years, it is phenomenal, and entitles Dr. Pierce to the gratitude accorded him by women, as the first of specialists in the treatment of women's diseases.

Every sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, absolutely without charge. All replies are mailed, sealed in perfectly plain envelopes, without any printing or advertising whatever, upon them. Write without fear as without fee, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

Obituary.

Little Albert Marki Biry, only son and child of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Biry, died Saturday evening at 4:30 o'clock at the home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Bendele. He was nine months and twelve days old at the time of his demise, and though his stay with us was short his little life was filled with love and his departure has caused many heartaches and a void that can never be filled. Yet it was the will of Him who is All-wise and Just.

My own little darling,
My precious baby boy,
I loved you, loved you, darling,
You were my every joy.

And now you've gone away,
My own, my baby son;
Yet I will have to stay
Without my little one.

Your dear little form
Was cold as cold could be,
I broke my heart, baby,
I could not bear to see.

Your pretty baby eyes
That gladdened me for me
Are closed now forever
And then I'll never see.

Your little face and lips, dear,
That I so often kissed
And felt the quick response
Are oh! so awfully missed!

Our home is not the place
That once it used to be,
For you, my precious darling,
Are no more with me.

Now you are an angel
With our Father above.
For a time we'll have to part
No matter how dearly we love.

You've gone, my little Albert,
Yet I will never, never forget
But long and mourn for you, dear,
Till we again have met.

God took you so soon,
My darling little one;
Oh, help me to understand
That "God's will be done!"

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Enid Maitland, a brave, free and unspooled young Philadelphia girl, is taken to the Colorado mountains by her uncle, Robert Maitland, James Armstrong, Maitland's protegee, falls in love with her.

CHAPTER II.—His persistent wooing enrages the girl, but she hesitates, and Armstrong goes east on business without a definite answer.

CHAPTER III.—Enid hears the story of a mining engineer, Newbold, whose wife fell off a cliff and was so seriously hurt that he was compelled to shoot her while he went for help.

CHAPTER IV.—Kirkby, the old guide who tells the story, gives Enid a package of letters which she finds are from the dead woman's body. She reads the letters and at Kirkby's request keeps them.

CHAPTER V.—While Enid is bathing in the river in a fancied solitude, a big bear appears on the bank and is about to plunge into the water to attack the girl when a shot rings out and the animal is killed by a strange man.

CHAPTER VI.—Enid is caught in a storm which wipes out her party's camp. She is dashed upon the rocks and injured. The strange man who shot the bear finds her unconscious and carries her to shelter.

CHAPTER VII.—Members of the camping party realizing that Enid is lost in the missing girl.

CHAPTER VIII.—No trace of her is found and word is telegraphed to her father. James Armstrong is asking the girl's father, expressing the belief that she is dead. Armstrong says he will find her, and Maitland agrees to their marriage if he succeeds.

CHAPTER IX.—Enid regains consciousness in the hut of the man who had rescued her from the storm and he dresses her foot which had been severely injured.

CHAPTER X.—The girl spends a fairly comfortable night, but her host in the next room a restless one as he lives over days that are gone. He has some secret in his life.

CHAPTER XI.—Morning finds Enid refreshed and ready for the substantial breakfast the man has prepared for her.

CHAPTER XII.—Her rescuer goes in search of Enid's party, but returns at nightfall alone and unsuccessful. In his absence she discovers books which show him to be a man of education.

CHAPTER XIII.—Enid finds that she must remain in the mountains until her foot is better and the mountain trails passable, or permit her companion to leave her alone for a week while he goes in search of help. She decides to have him remain with her.

CHAPTER XIV.—A whole month passes before Enid's foot is thoroughly well and in the meantime she discovers that she is in love with the strange silent man who intrudes himself as little as possible on her notice.

CHAPTER XV.—The man comes to a realization of his love for her, but naturally in that strange solitude and the relations of the girl and her rescuer become unnatural and strained.

CHAPTER XVI.—The stranger tells of a wife he had who is dead, and says he has sworn to ever cherish her memory by living in solitude. He and Enid, however, confess their love for each other. She learns that the man who killed his wife in the mountain.

CHAPTER XVII.—Enid discovers the writer of the letters to Newbold's wife to have been James Armstrong. Newbold decides to start to the settlement for help.

CHAPTER XVIII.—The man is racked by the belief that he is unfaithful to his wife's memory, and Enid is tempted to tell him of the letters in her possession.

CHAPTER XIX.—Armstrong, accompanied by Kirkby and Robert Maitland, start out on a systematic search for some trace of Enid. They find a note that Newbold had left in the deserted cabin, and know that the girl is in his keeping.

CHAPTER XX.—Newbold returns from hunting game and sees a man near the hut. It is James Armstrong, who has at last located the missing girl, and he enters the cabin.

CHAPTER XXI.—Armstrong pleads his love for Enid, but she reminds him of his affection for Newbold's wife. He grows insulting and Enid orders him from her presence. Newbold returns opportunely.

CHAPTER XXII.—

The Odds Against Him.

The noise of the opening of the door and the rush of cold air that followed awoke Enid Maitland to instant action. She rose to her feet and faced the entrance through which she expected Newbold to reappear—for of course the newcomer must be he—and for the life of her she could not help that radiating flash of joy, the momentary anticipation of which fairly transfigured her being; although if she had stopped to reflect she would have remembered that not in the whole course of their acquaintance had Newbold ever entered her room at any time without knocking and receiving permission.

Some of that joy yet lingered in her lovely face when she tardily recognized the newcomer in the half light. Armstrong, scarcely waiting to close the door, sprang forward joyfully with his hands outstretched.

"Enid!" he cried.

Naturally he thought the look of expectant happiness he had surprised upon her face was for him and he accounted for its sudden disappearance by the shock of his unexpected, unannounced, abrupt, entrance.

The warm color had flushed her face, but as she stared at him her aspect rapidly changed. She grew paler. The happy light that had shone in her eyes faded away and as he approached her she shrank back.

"You!" she exclaimed almost in terror.

"Yes," he answered smilingly, "I have found you at last. Thank God you are safe and well. Oh, if you could only know the agonies I have gone through. I thought I loved you when I left you six weeks ago, but now—"

In eager impetuosity he drew nearer to her. Another moment and he would have taken her in his arms, but she would have none of him.

"Stop," she said with a cold and inflexible sternness that gave pause even to his buoyant joyful assurance.

"Why, what's the matter?"

"The matter? Everything, but—"

"No evasions, please," continued the man still cheerfully but with a growing misgiving. His suspicions, in abeyance for the moment because of his joy at seeing her alive and well, arose with renewed force. "I left you practically pledged to me," he resumed.

"Not so fast," answered Enid Maitland, determined to combat the slightest attempt to establish a binding claim upon her.

"Isn't it true?" asked Armstrong. "Here, wait," he said before she could answer, "I am half frozen, I have been searching for you since early morning in the storm." He unbuttoned and unbelied his huge fur coat as he spoke and threw it carelessly on the floor by his Winchester leaning against the wall.

"Now," he resumed, "I can talk better."

"You must have something to eat then," said the girl.

She was glad of the interruption since she was playing for time. She did not quite know how the interview would end, he had come upon her so unexpectedly and she had never formulated what she would say to him, that which she felt she must say. She must have time to think, to collect herself, which he in his part was quite willing to give her, for he was not much better prepared for the interview than she. He really was hungry and tired, his early journey had been foolhardy and in the highest degree dangerous. The violence of his admiration for her added to the excitement of her presence, and the probable nearness of Newbold as to whose whereabouts he wondered were not conducive to rapid recuperation. It would be comfort to him also to have food and time.

"Sit down," she said. "I shall be back in a moment."

The fire of the morning was still burning in the stove in the kitchen; to heat a can of soup, to make him some buttered toast and hot coffee, were the tasks of a few moments; she brought them back to him, set them on the table before him and bade him fall to.

"By jove," exclaimed the man after a little time as he began to eat hastily but with great relish what she had prepared, while she stood over him watching him silently. "This is cozy. A warm, comfortable room, something to eat served by the finest woman in the world, the prettiest girl on earth to look at—what more could a man desire? This is the way it's going to be always in the future."

"You have no warrant whatever for saying or hoping that," answered the girl slowly but decisively.

"Have I not?" asked the man quickly. "Did you not say to me a little while ago that you liked me better than any man you had ever met and that I might win you if I could? Well, I can, and what's more, I will in spite of yourself, Enid," he laughed. "Why, the memory of that kiss I stole from you makes me mad." He pushed the things before him and rose to his feet once more. "Come, give me another," he said. "It isn't in the power of woman to stand against a love like mine."

"Isn't it?"

"No, indeed."

"Louise Newbold did," she answered very quietly but with the swiftness and dexterity of a sword thrust by a master hand, a mighty arm.

Armstrong stared at her in open mouthed astonishment.

"What do you know about Louise Rosser or Newbold?" he asked at last.

"All that I want to know."

"And did that damned hound tell you?"

"If you mean Mr. Newbold, he never mentioned your name, he does not know you exist."

"Where is he now?" thundered the man.

"Have no fear," answered the woman calmly, "he has gone to the settlements to tell them I am safe and to seek help to get me out of the mountains."

"Fear!" exclaimed Armstrong, proudly, "I fear nothing on earth. For years, ever since I heard his name in fact, I have longed to meet him. I want to know who told you about that woman—Kirkby?"

"He never mentioned your name in connection with her."

"But you must have heard it somewhere," cried the man thoroughly bewildered. "The birds of the air didn't tell it to you, did they?"

"She told me herself," answered Enid Maitland.

"She told you? Why, she's been dead in her grave five years, shot to death by that murderous dog of a husband of hers."

"A word with you, Mr. Armstrong," said the woman with great spirit. "You can't talk that way about Mr. Newbold; he saved my life twice over, from a bear and then in the cloudburst which caught me in the canon."

"That even up a little," said Armstrong. "Perhaps for your sake I will spare him."

"You!" laughed the woman contemptuously. "Spare him? Be advised, look to yourself, if he ever dares out what I know, I don't believe any power on earth could save you."

"Oh," said Armstrong carelessly enough, although he was consumed with hate and jealousy and raging against her clearly evident disdain. "I can take care of myself, I guess. Anyway I only want to talk about you, not about him or her. Your father—"

"Is he well?"

"Well enough, but heart-broken, crushed. I happened to be in his house in Philadelphia when the telegram came from your uncle that you were lost and probably dead. I had just asked him for your hand," he added, smiling grimly at the recollection.

"You had no right to do that."

"I know that."

"It was not, it is not, his to give."

"Still when I won you I thought it would be pleasant all around if he knew and approved."

"And did he?"

"Not then, he literally drove me out of the house, but afterwards he said if I could find you I could have you; and, by Heaven, I have found you and I will have you whether you like it or not."

"Never," cried the woman decisively.

The situation had got on Armstrong's nerves, and he must perforce show himself in his true colors. His only resources were his strength, not of mind but of body. He made another most damaging mistake at this juncture.

"We are alone here, and I am master, remember," he said meaningly. "Come, let's make up. Give me a kiss for my pains and—"

"I have been alone here for a month with another man," answered Enid Maitland who was strangely unafraid in spite of this threat. "A gentleman, he has never so much as offered to touch my hand without my permission; the contrast is quite to your disadvantage."

"Are you jealous of Louise Rosser?" asked Armstrong suddenly seeing that he was losing ground and casting about desperately to account for it, and to recover what was escaping him.

"Why, that was nothing, a mere boy and girl affair," he ran on with a specious good humor as if it were all a trifle. "The woman was, I hate to say it, just crazy in love with me, but I really never cared anything especially for her; it was just a harmless sort of flirtation anyway. She afterward married this man Newbold and that's all there was about it."

The truth would not serve him and in his desperation and desire he staked everything on this astounding lie. The woman he loved looked at him with her face as rigid as a mask.

"You won't hold that against me, will you?" pleaded the man. "I told you that I'd been a man among men, yes, among women, too, here in this rough country, and that I wasn't worthy of you; there are lots of things in my past that I ought to be ashamed of and I am, and the more I see you the more ashamed I grow, but as for loving any one else, all that I've ever thought or felt or experienced before now is just nothing."

And this indeed was true, and even Enid Maitland with all her prejudice could realize and understand it. Out of the same mouth, was said of old, proceeded blessing and cursing, and from these same lips came truth and falsehood; but the power of the truth to influence this woman was as nothing to the power of falsehood. She could never have loved him, she now knew; a better man had won her affections, a nobler being claimed her heart; but if he had told the truth regarding his relationship to Newbold's wife and then had completed it with his passionate avowal of his present love for her, she would have at least admired him and respected him.

"You have not told me the truth," she answered directly; "you have deliberately been false."

"Can't you see," protested the man drawing nearer to her, "how much I love you?"

"Oh, that; yes I suppose that is true; as far as you can love any one I will admit that you do love me."

"So far as I can love any one?" he repeated after her. "Give me a chance and I'll show you."

"But you haven't told the truth about Mrs. Newbold. You have calumniated the dead, you have sought to shelter yourself by throwing the burden of a guilty passion upon the weaker vessel; it isn't manlike, it isn't—"

Armstrong was a bold fighter, quick and prompt in his decisions. He made another effort to set himself right. He staked his all on another throw of the dice, which he began to feel were somehow loaded against him.

"You are right," he admitted, wondering anxiously how much the woman really knew. "It wasn't true, it was a coward's act, I am ashamed of it. I'm so mad with love for you that I scarcely know what I am doing, but I loved Louise Rosser after a fashion before ever Newbold came on the scene. We were pledged to each other; a foolish quarrel arose, she was jealous of other girls—"

"And had she no right to be?"

"Oh, I suppose so. We broke it off anyway and then she married Newbold, out of pique I suppose, or what you will. I thought I was heart-broken at the time, it did hit me pretty hard; it was five or six years ago; I was a youngster then, I am a man now. The woman has been dead long since; there was some cock-and-bull story about her falling off a cliff and her husband being compelled to shoot her. I didn't believe it at the time, and naturally I have been waiting to get even with him. I have been hating him for five years, but he has been good to you and we will let bygones be bygones. What do I care for Louise Rosser, or for him, or for what he did to her, now! I am sorry that I said what I did, but you will have to charge it to my blinding passion for you. I can truthfully say that you are one woman that I have ever craved with all my heart. I will do anything, be anything, to win you."

It was very brilliantly done; he had not told a single untruth; he had admitted much, but he had withheld the essentials after all. He was playing against desperate odds, he had no knowledge of how much she knew, or where she had learned anything. Every one about the mining camp where she had lived had known of his love for Louise Rosser, but he had not supposed there was a single human soul who had been privy to its later developments, and he could not figure out any way by which Enid Maitland could have learned by any possibility any more of the story than he had told her. He had calculated swiftly and with the utmost nicety, just how much he should confess. He was a keen witted clever man and he was fighting for what he held most dear, but his eagerness and zeal, as they have often done, overrode his judgment, and he made another mistake at this juncture. His evil genius was at his elbow.

"You must remember," he continued, "that you have been alone here in these mountains with a man for over a month; the world—"

"What, what do you mean?" exclaimed the girl, who indeed knew very well what he meant, but who would not admit the possibility.

"It's not every man," he added, blindly rushing to his doom, "that would care for you or want you—after that."

He received a sudden and terrible enlightenment.

"You coward," she cried, with upraised hand, whether in protest or to strike him neither ever knew, for at that moment the door opened the second time that morning to admit another man.

WILSON FOR OPTION

GOV. WOODROW WILSON SAYS HE BELIEVES IN TRUE LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Presidential Possibility Depletes Dragging into Politics A Social Question.

Trenton, N. J.—In a recent letter to Rev. Thomas B. Shannon, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon league in New Jersey, Gov. Woodrow Wilson, of that state, now prominently before the public as a Democratic presidential possibility, said that he was against the liquor question in politics.

"I am a thorough believer in local self-government," said Gov. Wilson, "and I believe that every self-governing community which constitutes a social unity should have the right to control the matter of the regulation or of the withholding of licenses. But the questions involved are social and moral, and are not susceptible of being made part of a party program. Whenever they have been made the subject matter of party contests, they have cut the lines of party organization and party action athwart to the utter confusion of political action in every other field. I do not believe that party programs of the highest consequence to the political life of the state and of the nation ought to be thrust on one side and hopelessly embarrassed for long periods together by making a political issue of a great question, which is essentially non-political, non-partisan, moral and social, in its nature."

WOODROW WILSON, Democratic Governor of New Jersey, Who Favors Local Option.

ANTI-SALOON TEXT BOOK AGAINST LICENSE MISSTATES THE FACTS.

Columbus, O.—The Anti-Saloon league of Ohio has issued its "Campaign Text Book Against License" for use in the campaign in Ohio for constitutional delegates.

In the past session of the Ohio legislature Senator Green, of Coshocton, introduced a constitutional convention bill which allowed the question of licensing the sale of liquors in Ohio to be submitted to the people as a separate issue. The text book of the Anti-Saloon league is trying to show that a license law in Ohio will allow the unrestricted sale of intoxicants. The liquor men are fighting for the license law, as this is the only method by which the sale of liquor has been found to be regulated satisfactorily. The present constitution of Ohio gives the legislature the right to pass laws regulating the traffic in liquors. The result is that "wet and dry" legislation is before the legislature three-fourths of the time of each session, to the detriment of progressive legislation.

The Dean bill, which provided that all saloonists should be of good character, was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court. A license law will have the character of the applicant as the basis for granting licenses. The license plan for Ohio is meeting with the approval of editors and prominent men throughout the state.

LEAVENWORTH SEEKS TO DERIVE A REVENUE FROM LIQUOR TRADE.

Leavenworth, Kan.—The city fathers of Leavenworth are trying to enact some law by which they can secure a revenue from the liquor traffic for Leavenworth. For some time the custom of bringing liquor into the city in wagons from Missouri has increased, and it has now reached such an extent that the city fathers realize a large revenue could be secured by placing a tax upon each wagon hauling liquor that comes into the city. The persons to be taxed express their willingness to pay the tax.

Hundreds of cases of beer and other liquors are seen on the streets of Leavenworth every day being delivered to customers throughout the city. The city is losing a vast sum of revenue each year, while the man engaged in business is compelled to bear the burdens of the city's upkeep.

It is said that the new ordinance will be for the purpose of producing revenue only. The attitude of the city is taken as the beginning of more liberal measures toward the liquor trade throughout the state.

Horses and Horse Breeding.

Mr. Bush-Brown of Washington, D. C., a sculptor, who is a great admirer and student of horses, writes most entertainingly of "Horses and Horse Breeding" in the American Breeders Magazine. He bases the classification of the horse on its origin, making three main types, the Celtic, Asiatic and the Arab or African horse. Comparisons of the skeleton of the thoroughbred and trotter with the Arab furnish explanations of the superior carrying power and endurance of the Arab.

Range for Turkey Flock.

It is impossible to succeed in raising turkeys unless you have ample range for them. A wooded range is most suitable, and under these conditions the birds procure much of their food without expense to their owner. Raising turkeys is very profitable and requires little effort under proper conditions.

DISEASE FOUND AMONG

Tuberculosis Affects Animals as Man—Loss Amounts Millions Annually.

Farmers' Bulletin 473, issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, contains a most comprehensive statement of facts on bovine tuberculosis, symptoms of the disease, its spread, how a herd is infected and its prevention.

"Tuberculosis," the bulletin says, "is a widespread disease affecting man and also man. Human tuberculosis is its chief victim, but there is no kind of animal that is not affected. Hogs and chickens are affected but seldom, horses and sheep are infected and its prevalence is spreading from cow to cow in a slow but sure way."

The disease is contagious, spreads from cow to cow in a slow but sure way, and may become noticeable for months or years. The tuberculin test, which reveals the germ in a few hours, always proves successful when in the hands of an experienced veterinarian.

"The disease is common to hogs," the bulletin goes on, "public abattoirs report that a percentage of hogs inspected is found to be tuberculous. The losses to cattle and hogs are enormous, amounting to millions of dollars annually. Turning to the infection of humans with the tuberculosis through cattle, the bulletin says: 'Milk is the staple food of infants and young children and is usually taken in the raw state. If this milk contains millions of living tubercle germs, young children fed on a milk often contract the disease. It is a frequent cause of death among them.'

"Meat from tuberculous cattle is so likely to convey the infection several reasons. It does not so frequently contain the germs, cook destroys those that may be present, and, lastly, meat is not consumed by very young children."

As to the spread of the disease, the bulletin says: "Sooner or later a tuberculous cow begins to give off germs of the disease. The germs escape by the mouth and nose, the body, in the milk, and in discharge from the genital organs. When germs are being given off in any of these ways, the disease is known as open tuberculosis."

The bulletin concludes with: "Dirty, crowded stables are favorable to tuberculosis. Under these conditions the disease spreads rapidly and is only kept out by difficulty."

"Clean, airy, well-lighted stables, on the other hand, are unfavorable to the development of the disease. If brought into such a stable it does not spread so rapidly and is not difficult to get rid of as in the first case."

"A well-built, sanitary stable need not be made of expensive material or of elaborate design, but should have plenty of light, air, and drainage."

"Light is very important. Direct sunlight is a great destroyer of germs. Tubercle bacilli soon die if exposed to sunlight. It is a disinfectant always ready to work without cost."
